

Daisy Chain in Social Engineering:

In social engineering, the concept of a daisy chain can refer to manipulating individuals or entities in a sequence to achieve an ultimate goal. For instance:

An attacker could convince an employee to give them access to a system, which in turn could be used to gain further access to more sensitive areas.

The attacker may target one person to introduce a malicious email, and then this email spreads to others, creating a chain of compromised accounts.